

About the Department of Law:	The history of Law Department can be traced back to the establishment of the University of Turin, in 1404, and has followed its developments over the ensuing six centuries. The Department of Law is located in Turin in the midtown. It is one of the leading Law faculties in Europe, with particular strengths in the fields of comparative law and private law. Additionally, the Department of Law has improved its physical facilities (including international exchange programs with a number of World's leading research Universities). Department of Law coordinates the research work of more than 120 law professors in the different areas of law.
Academic and Degree Programs	The Department offers a number of degrees, starting with the laurea di giurisprudenza (equivalent to an LL.B.), laurea magistrale (postgraduate law degree, equivalent to an LL.M.) and several specialized LL.M. programs. The Department also offers some brief degree courses (three years). In addition, the department offers the dottorato di ricerca or the traditional research Ph.D. degree. As a result of the Bologna Process, all of the UNITO Law degrees are fully comparable and transferrable across Europe, and graduates of the law department in fact practice in a number of leading jurisdictions across Europe.
Degrees fully taught in English	The Department has widened its offer with an LL.B and a LL.M entirely taught in English. The undergraduate degree in “Global law and transnational Legal studies” aims to train students to be able to complete different professional tasks in the international context. The fields of expertise can go from business work in the legal divisions of large multinational organizations to an institutional career. Moreover, the Course foresees for careers in the world on NGOs and the third sector. The Master’s Degree in “European Legal Studies” offers a broad, advanced education on a wide range of subjects related to European and international law, the protection of fundamental rights in the framework of multilevel constitutionalism, including substantive EU law, comparative and global administrative law, transnational private law and dispute settlement.
